Dear Dr. Patil.

Thank you for reviewing the above referenced manuscript. I greatly appreciate your contribution and time, which not only assisted me in reaching my decision, but also enables the author(s) to disseminate their work at the highest possible quality. Without the dedication of reviewers like you, it would be impossible to manage an efficient peer review process and maintain the high standards necessary for a successful journal.

You will shortly receive a notification from Elsevier's reviewer recognition platform, which provides you with a link to your "My Elsevier Reviews" private profile page, certificates, editor recognition as well as discounts for Elsevier services.

I hope that you will consider Journal of Molecular Liquids as a potential journal for your own submissions in the future.

As a token of appreciation, we would like to provide you with a review recognition certificate on Elsevier Reviewer Hub (reviewerhub.elsevier.com). Through the Elsevier Reviewer Hub, you can also keep track of all your reviewing activities for this and other Elsevier journals on Editorial Manager.

EVALUATION

Please list your revision requests for the authors and provide your detailed comments, including highlighting limitations and strengths of the study and evaluating the validity of the methods, results, and data interpretation. If you have additional comments based on Q2 and Q3 you can add them as well.

The manuscript "Increases in the susceptibility of human endometrial CD4+ T cells to HIV infection post-menopause are not dependent on greater viral receptor expression frequency" presents a well planned and executed study. The authors have tried to tease out the causes of higher incidence of HIV among post-menauposal women. It is attempted to find underlined cause for higher incidence of HIV infection in post-menauposal women as found by epidemiological evidence. The experiments are well planned and executed. I have following specific comments to make.

- 1 The authors have not presented the participant characteristics. It would have been better to also present age distribution. It will be interesting to see if age is also a factor for higher infectivity as seen in the study.
- 2. Since the authors are doing experiments with mised cell population, the data on other immune cells, especially NK cells, DCs and macrophages needs to be given. Do these cells also play a role in higher infection rate as they do produce factors that may affect CD4+ cells.
- 3. The authors allude to the role of Tregs as one of the reasons. It would be nice if they can present data on Trgs and CD4 infectivity after controlling for all other variables studied. That may throw more light on the role of Trg cells.
- 4. The authors should discuss possible reasons for why increased populations of CD4, CCR5 and a4b7 cells lead to greater infection rate in EM but not in CX and ECX.
- 5. Sentence 386-389 and 389-392 contradict each other. Authors need to explain this.

"Notable transmitted HIV drug resistance among people who inject drugs in Pakistan"

This study reports the presence of transmitted drug resistance mutation from five cities in Pakistan.

The study has used appropriate methodology.

The study refers to samples collected in the year 2014. Hence, the findings may not have any relevance to the National ART programme.

Presence of DRM mutation E138A in about 58% isolates in absence of ongoing ART programme is rather surprising. This is possible if this is polymorphism rather than mutation or if there is extensive networking among the PWID allowing such high prevalence of E138A mutation. My personal feeling is that it is a polymorphism; varying rates of this mutation are reported in different HIV subtypes and geographical areas. The author may include these points in the discussion. Also it will help if they refer to publications on the networks of PWIDs in the cities from where the samples have been collected. Considering that this mutation is not conferring resistance to the drugs in the National programme, it may not have any impact on the success of treatment. Hence this finding is not of significance for ART programme for the country.

Dear Dr Dodamani,

In view of your expertise I would be very grateful if you could review the following manuscript which has been submitted to Regenerative Engineering and Translational Medicine.

Manuscript Number: RETM-D-24-00080

Title: Corelation in stem cell technology, tissue engineering, and regenerative medicine

Abstract: Enormous advancements have been achieved in the biosciences ever since the discovery of stem cell technology. These advancements have paved the way for new research to be conducted on the unsolved problems that still exist in stem cell technology, tissue engineering, and regenerative medicine. The process of changing adult stem cells into pluripotent stem cells (iPSC), which is sometimes referred to as nuclear programming, has been a popular subject of research in the field of biosciences, despite the presence of ongoing moral and logistical challenges. Stem cell therapy has been proven to be incredibly advantageous for stem cell transplantation owing to its promised advantages over the limits of autologous transplantation of a person's tissues. Even though stem cell based treatment is not entirely capable of curing illnesses. The shortcomings of stem cell treatment have inspired researchers to conceive of potential solutions including tissue engineering technologies for regenerative medicine because stem cell transplantation seems extremely beneficial and promising. The field of regenerative medicine has been included in the field as a result of the development of embryonic stem-cell technology, which has led to a resurgence of attempts to combine potentially fruitful tissue engineering techniques. In this review, we have discussed the potential of pluripotency of embryonic stem cells in disease model, their relation in functional tissue engineering, regenerative medicine therapies at clinical stage and pre-clinical phase and try to explore the breakthroughs that have already taken place and future connections between stem cell technology and tissue engineering to potentiate regenerative medicine.
