

SDG16: Peace, Justice and Strong Institutions

KAHER is a prominent academic institution in India, known for its strong emphasis on quality education, research, and community engagement. By fostering knowledge and research in these areas, KAHER can help prepare students to contribute positively to the achievement of SDG 16, ensuring that strong, just, and peaceful institutions are built for a better future. There are several ways in which the institution contributes to the principles of Peace, Justice, and Strong Institutions:

Education and Research: KAHER likely offers academic programs that deal with governance, law, ethics, social sciences, and public administration — fields that directly contribute to SDG 16.

Law and Social Justice Programs: KAHER has a law school and other related programs that would train students to promote justice and human rights, which is a key aspect of SDG 16. The university may also conduct research in these fields and support initiatives aimed at improving governance.

Community Engagement: KAHER, often engage in community service and outreach programs that aim to promote peace, reduce social conflict, and build stronger, more inclusive institutions at the local level.

Collaboration with Government and NGOs: KAHER may collaborate with governmental and non-governmental organizations to help promote peace-building initiatives and provide policy recommendations based on research findings.

Ethics and Leadership: By focusing on ethics, leadership, and public administration, KAHER contributes to the development of individuals who can take leadership roles in strengthening institutions and upholding justice and peace.
